

Q: What software tools are currently missing and impede progress in the detector development effort?

A: We believe that since we basically just use GEANT and a few other specialized programs (such as TracePro for optical ray tracing simulations, which we already have), at least for the present time, we feel we have essentially everything we need to move forward with our detector development in calorimetry.